

INDIGENOUS LED CANNABIS COMPANY LAUNCHES AT LIFT & CO. EXPO IN TORONTO

Toronto, Ontario (November 19, 2021) – Western Canada’s leading Indigenous cannabis company, All Nations made its debut to much fanfare at the Lift & Co. Expo, Canada’s largest Cannabis and Psychedelic trade show this weekend.

Founded along the shores of the mighty Fraser River in British Columbia, All Nations is led by a collective of dynamic Indigenous community leaders and works with First Nations partners to make space for Indigenous participation in the licensed cannabis industry.

Not only has All Nations been the inspiration behind a Health Canada licensed state-of-the-art 30,000 square foot cultivation and processing facility at Shxwha:y First Nation, a small but determined Stó:lō community in the Fraser Valley, but it also has led the charge in negotiations with the Province of British Columbia on distribution and retail.

All Nations has grown from an idea on-reserve to establishing a strong track record across Canada for Indigenous engagement, participation and success in the cannabis industry. “The years of an ‘us versus them’ mentality are over,” suggests Darwin Douglas, Chief Executive of All Nations and an elected Tribal Chief of the Stó:lō Tribal Council. He went on to say, “We are proof of the government’s commitment to reconciliation with Indigenous Peoples and will remain steadfast on this collaborative approach to achieve our collective communities’ dreams and aspirations. It can be done.”

All Nations will be featured at a LIFT & Co. moderated panel with a focus on innovation and the winning traits for cannabis entrepreneurs. CEO Douglas will be participating on this feature panel on Friday November 19th between 12:15 and 1pm. “Success is defined much differently on reserve and within our communities; it is not simply measured by dollars and cents,” confirmed Darwin. “I am excited to educate Lift participants on the Indigenous advantage and look forward to building our network and establishing long-lasting sustainable partnerships.”

With its cultivation and processing licences, the facility at Shxwha:y Village will produce 4,000 kgs of premium cannabis products annually for distribution nationally and internationally from the traditional and unceded territory of the Shxwha:y people in Chilliwack, BC, Canada. Shxwha:y Chief Robert Gladstone says, “Our investments in our people, processes and partnerships have laid the groundwork to advance economic development on-reserve and building meaningful employment opportunities for our members and communities for years to come. We are in production, utilizing leading technology, with the care and commitment to quality, from top to bottom. We are excited to share our high yield products with retail markets across this country, as well as international medical markets.”

All Nations is systematically building authentic relationships with First Nations across the country. Focused on uplifting communities in which they operate, they are positioning to announce significant partnerships and investments in British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba in the near future.

All Nations works to foster positive relationships with all communities it engages with while demonstrating the positive developments that can be achieved by working with all levels of governments in an honest and transparent way. “All Nations is focused on delivering prosperity and social impact to the communities where we live and work” CEO Douglas firmly states.
